

Kate Foster is a second-year PhD student in Early Modern European History at University of Colorado, Boulder. She has a BA in History (summa cum laude) also from CU Boulder. Kate's research interests include native Irish political culture and stereotypes of the Gael in sixteenth-century Ulster and the British Isles as well as nationalist visual culture in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Ireland and the United States. She is studying under the direction of Dr. Paul E.J. Hammer. Kate is currently working on preliminary research into relationships between the O'Neills of Tyrone and the landed Scottish aristocracy in the latter half of the sixteenth-century. Kate is also interested in archival management and book preservation and has over two years of experience in the field. Other previous work includes employment with the Daniel O'Connell and Richard Mulcahy collections at the James Joyce Library at University College, Dublin, and she was a Benjamin Gilman scholar in Ireland and Thessaloniki, Greece for the year 2019. She has two children, and lives in Denver with her partner.
